Powersoft renews Bose Professional Partnership

Powersoft has announced the renewal of its long-term technology partnership with Bose Professional, extending a collaboration that has seen the two companies develop a shared amplification platform for the professional installed sound market. Under the renewed agreement, Bose Professional will continue to market the PowerShareX four-channel amplifier series, comprising the PSX1204D, PSX2404D and PSX4804D, built on Powersoft's amplification technology.

The PowerShareX series combines high energy efficiency, precise audio signal control and significant power density in a compact form factor. Designed to operate within the Bose Professional ControlSpace ecosystem, which brings together amplifiers, processors and loudspeakers under a single unified software platform, the amplifiers simplify deployment while maintaining seamless functionality across integrated audio installations.

The platform is well suited to a wide range of environments where permanently installed audio systems are required, including corporate spaces, hotels, retail outlets, educational facilities, theatres, performing arts centres, places of worship and sports facilities. Across these applications, the reliability, scalability and energy efficiency of the PowerShareX range help integrators deliver consistent audio performance alongside simplified system management.

"Powersoft has been an exceptional engineering partner, and together we have created an amplifier platform that truly reflects the performance and reliability our customers expect," says Matt Calhoun, chief operating officer at Bose Professional. "The PowerShareX line is the result of deep technical collaboration, combining Powersoft's amplification expertise with our commitment to seamless integration within the ControlSpace ecosystem. This partnership enables us to continue delivering powerful, efficient and highly integrated solutions that help our AV customers design better systems with greater confidence."
