

Krotos Studio Free

Krotos Studio, set to become Canva for sound, was announced and previewed at the NAMM show in June this year. Krotos Studio aims to be the next generation platform that simplifies and unifies the complex processes of working with sound into one single software.

A preview version of the software was released to a priority list earlier this month.

The feedback has been very positive. Austin Coffee from Strawberry Hill Studio said: "I've been experimenting with the preview version of Krotos Studio, and so far I LOVE it! I will definitely be using this tool whenever my projects require sound design. I can't wait to see what's in store next for this tool." Rick Foley, another user, said: "I absolutely love it!! The "perform" and "drag and drop" feature is seamless and so greatly simple. I've already begun new projects using the sounds from Krotos Studio."

A free version of Krotos Studio was promised and is now ready for launch in November. This version will allow users to create sounds for ambiences, Foley, footsteps and whooshes in seconds. All of the sounds created using Krotos Studio are 100% royalty-free. Users are encouraged to freely use them in any of their projects without worrying about copyright claim issues. Krotos' CEO Orfeas Boteas said: "We wanted to put an end to the pain of spending hours searching for the right sound and worrying about copyright issues. Krotos Studio unlocks your creativity. Just pick a preset and start performing unique and outstanding sounds instantly."
