

Telegrapher Speakers Rhino

Telegrapher, the Istanbul-based creator of handcrafted, pure analog speakers, returns to The NAMM Show 2025 from January 23-25 in Anaheim, California, where they will showcase their entire lineup of precision audio monitors, including the limited-edition deadmau5 speakers. Attendees will be the first to experience the debut of Rhino, Telegrapher's flagship four-way main reference monitor. Engineered for critical mixing and mastering, Rhino represents the pinnacle of the company's design philosophy: delivering unparalleled accuracy, warmth, and fullness for audio professionals.

The Rhino reference monitor features a dedicated upper bass driver, delivering enhanced warmth and tonal fullness while maintaining a clinically flat response. Its impeccable sound design is ideal for producers, mixers, and mastering engineers seeking to make informed decisions about tonal balance, stereo imaging, and overall mix cohesion.

“Rhino embodies our dedication to creating tools that serve the most discerning audio professionals,” said Emre Telci, Telegrapher’s CTO. “Every aspect of its acoustical design was meticulously engineered to achieve natural, uncolored sound reproduction, ensuring engineers can trust every critical decision they make.”

In addition to Rhino, Telegrapher will showcase their critically acclaimed lineup:

- Fox: Nearfield studio monitors offering precision and versatility for smaller setups.
- Gorilla and Gorilla S: Midfield monitors designed for robust performance in professional environments.
- Elephant: A low-frequency studio monitor delivering deep, impactful bass for larger setups.

These speakers, like Rhino, are handcrafted in Istanbul and rely on pure analog circuitry, ensuring a warm, natural, and non-fatiguing sound that sets Telegrapher apart. The custom-designed sealed cabinets deliver tight, clean bass, outperforming traditional ported systems for critical listening at moderate levels.

Fans of deadmau5 can also see the limited-edition deadmau5-branded versions of Telegrapher’s Gorilla, Fox, and Elephant models. These exclusive designs, created in partnership with the iconic artist, feature unique aesthetics and come with certificates of authenticity signed by deadmau5 himself and are now available at mau5hop.com. “We’re thrilled to be part of The NAMM Show again and to connect with the global music community,” said Erce Kaslioglu, CEO of Telegrapher. “Rhino represents our commitment to delivering the best in analog sound for professionals who demand nothing less than excellence.” “We invite dealers, distributors, and all audio enthusiasts to visit us at Booth #16119,” added Dindae Sheena, President of Global Sales and Marketing. “Let’s set up a meeting and explore how Telegrapher can enhance your studio or retail offerings.”

Telegrapher’s mission is rooted in the belief that music deserves to be heard in its purest form. With over 30 years of expertise, their handcrafted speakers inspire emotional connections through precise, immersive sound. Visit Booth #16119 at The NAMM Show from January 23-25, 2025, at the Anaheim Convention Center to experience the Rhino debut and the entire Telegrapher lineup.
